Human Rights Abuses in Sudan over the Month of July 2016

Overview

During the month of July 2016, SUDO (UK)'s network of human rights monitors have reported and verified 66 incidents relating to the abuse of human rights across Sudan involving eight Sudanese states.

Enclosed within the 66 reports, SUDO (UK) has assessed that forces under the direct control of the Government of Sudan were responsible for 32 instances of human rights abuses, whilst forces categorised as Janjaweed and/or pro-government were responsible for 30 abuses. The Armed Opposition movements were accountable for four abuses, whilst members of a Nuweiba ethnic militia were responsible for one instance. In total, 67 actors were identified as perpetrators within the 66 reports.

The 66 reports further detail the following: the death of 31 civilians including 10 minors; the injury of 47 persons; the rape of 17 women including seven minors (one woman died from injuries sustained during the rape); 28 arrests; nine incidents of kidnapping (including one by the RSF after injuring a civilian); four instances of aerial bombardment utilising no less than 84 bombs including explosive bombs and barrel bombs directly targeting 11 civilian villages; and 12 instances relating to a clampdown on journalists and media outlets including seven newspaper confiscations, two newspaper suspensions and two opening of investigations against journalists and newspapers.

This report highlights continued government bombardment in Darfur through the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Sudanese Air Force, as well as continual government repression against civil society and media institutions.

1 It is worth noting that the number of human rights abuses contained within this report certainly underestimate the total number of abuses and their effects on the civilian population. SUDO (UK) only uses information provided to it by the trusted SUDO (UK) network.

2 National Intelligence and Security Services (12); Police (5); Sudanese Air Force (4); Press and Publications Court/Committee (4); Rapid Support Forces (4); Sudanese Armed Forces (3).

3 Militias that SUDO monitors have thus far been unable to define. They may be paramilitary forces controlled directly by the Government, such as the Rapid Support Forces, or they may have a more irregular relationship with the Government, for example similar to various Janjaweed militias. The pattern and nature of the attacks lead SUDO monitors, victims and eyewitnesses to conclude that they are Government affiliated in some form, though not necessarily directly orchestrated by the Government.

Specific Incidents and Trends over the Month of July 2016

Continued Government Bombardment in Darfur, One Incident Reported in Blue Nile Despite Declaring a Ceasefire

Monitors submitted three reports (one in North Darfur and two in South Darfur) pertaining to aerial bombardments in Darfur. Enclosed within the reports were the confirmed deaths of six civilians, including four children (aged 8, 8, 11 and 12), and the injury of a 30 year-old civilian. The aerial bombardments targeted 11 civilian villages and utilised no less than 74 bombs, including explosive and barrel bombs.

Meanwhile, monitors submitted a further two reports on artillery bombardment by the Sudanese Armed Forces in South Darfur. Such bombardments resulted in the death of four civilians, including two 5 year-old twin brothers who were on their family’s farm located 5km west of Funga Al-Garia when the artillery hit.

In addition to the civilian casualties, the bombardments have caused the destruction of civilian homes and a mosque, as well as vast tracts of farmland and livestock which are so essential for civilian livelihoods. Statistics alone cannot convey the psychological effect that these bombardments have on civilians and the resulting panic that accompanies the sound of aircraft.

In Blue Nile, monitors reported one instance of aerial bombardment in spite of President Al-Bashir’s unilateral ceasefire declaration the previous month. The Sudanese Air Force dropped 10 explosive bombs on Amora area located in Gissan locality resulting in the death of livestock and the destruction of farmland. Fortunately no civilian casualties were reported. In addition to the breaking of the ceasefire in Blue Nile, SUDO (UK) monitors furthermore submitted a report concerning bombardments conducted by the Sudanese Armed Forces garrison in Al Dandoor, South Kordofan, against SPLM-N forces. The SPLM-N forces were seeking to take advantage of the rainy conditions to reposition themselves around Kadugli. However, no actual fighting took place.

Continued Clampdown on Media and Civil Society

Monitors have submitted 18 reports over the month of July relating to attacks against free speech and freedom of assembly.

Six of the 18 reports concern direct attacks on civil society. On two occasions, the National Intelligence and Security Services (NISS) prevented the convening of political seminars in Khartoum. The first concerned the presentation of the Sudan Shadow Government’s budget, whilst the second seminar was organised by the Reform Now Movement to discuss the aftermath of the attempted coup in Turkey. In another incident relating to freedom of assembly, riot police raided the El Mahas club in Khartoum using excessive force to break up a members meeting. During the raid the police locked the doors and fired tear gas into the building before entering and beating the participants, many of whom were elderly. In total 16 persons were arrested, 14 of which have been subsequently charged with offences including breaching the peace and causing a public disturbance.

Such restrictions continued to take place in the peripheral areas including Darfur and Gedaref. Seven civilians were arrested in Nertiti, Central Darfur, on the 31st July following their meeting with Donald Booth, the United States Special Envoy to Sudan and South Sudan. During the meeting they spoke candidly about their situation and ongoing events in Darfur. They were consequently detained shortly after by NISS officials. Similarly, a religious scholar was arrested in Geneina, West Darfur, following his earlier criticism of the Border Guards and the lack of government response to the incidents in Azernai, Um Tajok and Mouli. The Governor of West Darfur state used his powers in accordance with the Emergency Laws of the region to exile the scholar from Geneina and to sentence him to one years’ imprisonment, without trial, in Al-Huda prison situated in Omdurman. Meanwhile peaceful demonstrations in Gedaref, over the lack of government support for families who have lost their homes as a result of the flooding, were met with a number of arrests and fines for those involved.

The remaining 12 reports focussed exclusively on the continuing government clampdown on the media. There were seven reports on newspaper confiscations affecting the following newspapers: Al-Jareeda (x 2); Al-Tagheer (x2); Akhir Lahza (x2); and Al-Sahya. The newspaper confiscations occur post-print to ensure maximal financial pressure on media outlets. It is hoped that such pressure will either push the newspapers to appropriately toe the arbitrary lines set by the government and security services, or to push those critical of the government into financial ruin.

As well as newspaper confiscations, the Press and Publication Committee/Courts prevented the publication of Al-Jareeda newspaper on two separate occasions over the month of July for a total of four days. The first suspension occurred on the 1st July as punishment for the newspaper publishing an article in the column “Behind the News” that was deemed too critical and libellous of the Ministry of Water Resources, Irrigation and Electricity. The second suspension was for a total of three days following the publication of an announcement in the newspaper that was against the possible sale of the University of Khartoum’s premises to foreign investors.

The use of restrictive laws governing media behaviour in Sudan were additionally used in July against specific journalists. The Press and Publications Court continued proceedings against Al-Hidibi Yassin following an article he wrote over a year ago on the sale of Ismail Al-Azhari’s home, the first leader of an independent Sudan, whilst the court opened investigations into Suad Al-Khidir following an article published in Al-Jareeda newspaper on the 18th June 2016 on the prevalence of corruption in Omdurman locality. Similarly the NISS called Hassan Faroug, a noted sports journalist, into their offices to discuss his radio show where he accused the government of interfering with the Sudanese Football Federation’s election.

This decision was made on the 19th July in accordance with the Press and Publications Act of 2009. The Committee opened investigations against the newspaper when they were alerted to an announcement contained within the paper that supported the position of the students and graduates of the University of Khartoum against the selling of the university’s premises to foreign investors.

In a letter sent to the newspaper, the Committee listed a number of legal violations conducted by Al-Jareeda newspaper. This was in addition to comments that the newspaper had neglected its national responsibility and that it had acted without honesty and integrity. They further noted the Editor-in-Chief, Ashraf Abdelaziz, failed to arrive on time to a meeting on the 19th July. Additionally, the Committee argued that Ashraf Abdelaziz had failed to deliver the documents detailing the identities of the actors involved in the announcement.

Ashraf Abdelaziz responded stating that he had arrived at the meeting following its conclusion and in response he had provided a written apology explaining the reasons for his delayed arrival. It is noteworthy that in all similar cases the apology had been accepted and that another date had been selected for the Defendant to put their case forward.
